'Hands on Therapeutic Injection Practicum'

A monthly practicum for healthcare practitioners

These sessions will be ideal for practitioners already trained in injection techniques and are able to inject local analgesics, cortisone etc, that currently only occasionally use injection therapy because of a reluctance use cortisone and suppressive injectables.

NATI has been developed to increase interest and use of injection therapies by naturopathic practitioners, oriental medicine practitioners, and other interested healthcare professionals. This online resource www.nati-uk.org.uk may hopefully be of interest to all practitioners of natural therapeutic injection practices such as mesopuncture, mesotherapy, biopuncture, prolotherapy, neural therapy and trigger point injection therapy etc.

Naturopathic Therapeutic Injection is a technique in natural medicine, consisting of injecting low doses of biological solutions (herbal / plant extracts and homeopathic, anti-homotoxic, nutritional, vitamin, and mineral solutions, that are injected to stimulate natural healing. Naturopathic therapeutic Injection is very useful for many muscle, joint, tendon and sports injuries as well as degenerative conditions.

Biological solutions commonly used include, Traumeel; often used for inflammations and sports injuries such as sprains, contusions, post-traumatic swelling and other soft tissues injuries such muscular tears, and Zeel; often used for Arthritic degeneration Arthritic stiffness and pain of arthritis. Others include Spascupreel; used for muscular cramps, and Lymphomyosot; used for lymphatic drainage. Arnica is used for muscle pain, nux vomica is injected for digestive problems, and echinacea is used to increase the natural defence system of the body. Solutions are often combined and injected as a cocktail. Naturopathic Therapeutic Injections are non-invasive and a non-suppressive treatment strategy that stimulates the body's natural defence system.

It is likely the monthly venue will rotate around group member clinics or establish a central venue suitable for all.
